

MOLLOY

George Rush and Joanna Rush Molloy

With Jo Piazza and Chris Rovzar
E-mail: rushmolloy@nydailynews.com

JASON KEMPIN FILMMAGIC

Short and sweet Like all Webby winners, Prince made a terse acceptance speech. Unlike the others, though, he rocked the house after picking up his award.

Table-hopping
Jullanna Margulies played waitress at Sapa on W. 24th St. during a benefit for Project ALS.

High 5's at the Webbys

Winners were allowed only five-word speeches at the 10th Webby Awards for online excellence Monday at Cipriani Wall St., and Prince aced his: "What you think is true."

Perhaps fearing the punishment threatened by "Daily Show" comic genius Rob Corddry — a kick to the nether regions — should they utter a sixth or remove the "for show" trophy, everyone but Arianna Huffington obeyed. The pundit fived-it with, "Dahlinks, make blogs, not war," but walked off with the prize.

Emcee Corddry was also a winner of sorts — his wife is expecting. He also mentioned that while the Suicide-Girls site had provided him with "tons of swag," he REALLY liked the winning sites by BabyCenter, Apple and Mercedes.

Winner Mark Cuban, who sold Broadcast.com to Yahoo for $6 billion and bought the Dallas Mavericks, was a no-show, but ESPN Sports Guy Bill Simmons explained, "He's about five minutes away from winning the NBA championship, and [Commissioner] David Stern is just going to be enraged about it."

Rock-star-esque Chris DeWolfe, who with his partner sold MySpace.com to Rupert Murdoch for $560 million, caused fellow winner Bron Thomson to say, "He's blisssed" in her New Zealand accent; we realized she meant, "He's blessed." That, too.

But we asked the real rock star in the room, Internet co-creator Dr. Robert Kahn, why he didn't choose to profit from his invention.